We make this statement in justice to Mr. Cruger, who services to the Howards have ease. I wish to say—

First—There is no known preventive, and all substances that smell are injurious, and medicines taken as preventives do harm. One well-known lawyer of this city, delivered an address, of which the Russellville Herald says: "It was full of thought, highly culo gizing Kentucky magnanimity in this great crisis, and closing with an effective and powerful appeal in behalf of his suffering South, able and effective speaker. -The Covington (Ky.) Saturday Evening Press, says: "This local is not in a merry mood. Each day's dispatches from Memphis and New Orleans bring tidings of the illness r death of friend after friend who remained o fight when others fled—of brave heart stilled forever, and of generous hands folded to eternal rest; hearts that dared the pestience and hands that were never closed when help was asked. Most of these men were mere mechanics—type-setters and printers; but each one who has fallen at his post was a hero and a martyr, and, though many of them sleep in nameless graves, their virtues and the rexample will not be forgotten when once more the busy hum of industry and trade is heard in the places that shall know them no more forever. God bless and several sound inflicted by a desperado, a short time them all, living and dead." what the other two shared At noon they greeted each other more affectionately than ever brothers did, and at night it was a "Wish you well, dear boy." In business it was how to assist one another through in his particular sphere, and in pleasure enjoyments all three were ever near. In the epidemic all remains at their post, fulfilling their arduour duties one as local editor, the second as Associate Press agent, and the third in public offices and assisting the distressed by every means possible, until stricken down by fever. They all died, and to-day they lie side by side in the beautiful Elmwood, brothers in death as they were in lite. Their names are Herbert Landrum, Ed Worsham and R. R. Catron. -Zach P. Oliver, one of the faithful carriers of the postoffice department, died yester-day. It will be remembered that a young lady, left alone in this city by her relatives,
